

Installing the fax server was one of the best decisions this company every made. We reduced costs by eliminating dedicated fax lines. Plus, document workflow and archiving practices improved, and the ability to centrally manage all communications was made possible.

It was a match made in corporate heaven – almost. There was this one issue. They forgot about the paper. They still had signed contracts and invoices, carbon-paper forms and loads of other paper-based documents that needed to be faxed. Sure, they could've scanned them to a PC and then utilized the fax driver. But fortunately, they turned to me instead.

You see, I'm not your run-of-the-mill workgroup printer. No, I do something more. I can communicate with fax servers. I take all the paper documents that need to be faxed, along with the fax destination information, then convert it all into a language understood by the fax server. It does the rest!

The best part is the users. They don't have any clue as to what's going on behind the scenes. They simply enter the fax destination and hit the green button, just as they did before the fax server was installed.

Yep, because of me our company gets to enjoy all the benefits of the fax server investment, while offering employees the ability to easily send paper-based documents at the touch of a button.

I Communicate with Fax Servers. I'm a Muratec.

At Muratec, we help you get more out of your technology investments. What are the benefits of connecting your Muratec MFP to a corporate fax server?

- Leverage your existing technology investment. Muratec's e-mail gateway feature can effortlessly connect with some of the most widely used fax server applications on the market.
- The transmission process is transparent to the sender. In order to send a document the sender simply sets the document into the automatic document feeder, or platen glass, enters the fax destination and selects [Start]. That's it!
- In addition to communicating with fax servers Muratec MFP's feature standard network printing, color scanning to e-mail and PCs, and a analog fax line – just in case the network goes down and a document needs to be sent urgently.
